Soviet Paper Prints Defense Of Israeli View In Arab Conflict

The Soviet Union, long a firm supporter of the Arab cause, appears to be shifting slightly toward a more impartial appraisal of the Israeli-Arab conflict.

This conclusion is suggested by the publication in Moscow in the official foreign-affairs magazine, New Times, of an outspoken defense of the Israeli view in the controversy with the Arabs over use of the Jordan River waters, reports the New York Times, diplomatic relations with West Germany, and other issues in the Middle East.

The Israeli arguments were presented in the form of excerpts from a letter to the magazine by Mordechai Kaspi, Moscow correspondent of the Israeli Communist newspaper, Kol Haam, protesting against a pro-Arab article printed in New Times last September. In an editorial note, New Times said:

"In publishing these comments by the correspondent of the Israeli Communist newspaper, the editors hope to enable our readers to form a fuller and more objective picture of Arab-Israeli relations."

Foreign observers could not recall a similar situation in which a Soviet publication went out of its way to publish the Israeli viewpoint in a conflict with the Arabs.

The subtle shift is viewed not necessarily as reflecting a change of attitude toward specific problems dividing Israel and the Arab states but as still another example of a more sober, rational evaluation of all major issues, both domestic and foreign. The present Soviet administration likes to contrast this attitude with what it has described as the "hasty, ill-considered subjectivism" of Nikita Khrushchev's rule.

Among statements by the Israeli Communist newsman for which New Times provided a forum was an assertion that "Israel as a state situated on the Jordan River has just as much right to use its waters, says the New York Times, as the other countries, Syria, Lebanon, and Jordan, which are also situated on the banks of that river."

Mr. Kaspi criticized the earlier New Times article for an "incorrect and negative attitude" toward the position of President Habib Bourguiba of Tunisia, who has come out for a review of Arab policy toward Israel.

"It is beyond doubt that a Marxist, an internationalist, yes, a peace-loving person in general should not reject a proposal directed against the position of strength and position of war," Mr. Kaspi wrote.

Referring to the rupture of diplomatic relations between the Arab states and West Germany after Bonn decided to exchange ambassadors with Israel, he suggested pointedly that the Arabs did not break relations because of what the Communists view as the neo-Nazi revenge-seeking militaristic position "of the West German Government."

He criticized sweeping Soviet attacks on Israel on the ground that there were "two Israels, progressive and reactionary." Any attacks against the Israeli Government, he added, must not ignore the fact that the Arabs openly threaten the use of force, says the New York Times. Mr. Kaspi suggested that Soviet policy should favor a peaceful solution of the Arab-Israeli problem just as it called for a peaceful resolution of the Indian-Pakistani dispute.

Conservative Branch Cites Dilemma Over Public School Inroads On Afternoon Jewish Education

The United Synagogue of America, representing the congregational arm of Conservative Judaism, expressed "profound" concern at Kiamesha Lake, N. Y., over the growth of after-hours "enrichment programs" in public schools, reports George Dugan, in the New York Times. A resolution unanimously approved by the 1,600 delegates was critical of the "increasingly common practice" of adding to the normal school day one or two hours in the afternoon for special studies.

Such a practice, the resolution declared, creates a "dilemma" for the average Jewish student who utilizes the late afternoon for religious instruction. In addition, it pointed out, the enrichment programs clash with the early arrival of the sabbath during most of the fall, winter and spring months.

The resolution, adopted at the close of the United Synagogue's biennial convention in the Concord Hotel, added:

"Our concern is not merely restricted to the present, where this program, though limited in terms of geography, age, and ability of students, has already made inroads in the enrollment of religious schools. In all likelihood the enrichment trend outside of the normal school hours will be extended to include more communities and broader masses of students, regardless of age and ability. Afternoon Jewish education, which is presently functioning under enough handicaps, will be confronted with a catastrophe situation."

Dr. Louis Finkelstein, Chancellor of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, gave the closing address of the convention. He declared:

"Aside from everything else that has to be done to ameliorate the conditions of the poor, what is necessary is to create a system of values where a person can pursue creative goals which will give him dignity in his own eyes.

"More material improvement of a person's condition is not enough. What we need is a change in the spiritual outlook by the whole nation."

The day before, a New York theologian representing Conservative Judaism, took sharp issue with Orthodox leaders who oppose Christian-Jewish dialogues, says the New York Times. The speaker, Dr. Seymour Siegel, associate professor of theology at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, called for more such "conversation" and charged the leadership of Orthodox Judaism with making "unwarranted, ill-considered, and intemperate attacks on the efforts to explain Christianity to Jews and Judaism to Christians.

"They assume that if we engage in dialogue there arises the inevitability of converting Jews to Christianity," he declared. "This betrays both a misunderstanding of the meaning of dialogue and a lack of confidence in the ability of Jewish spokesmen to stand their ground."

Dr. Siegel addressed the biennial convention at the Concord Hotel of the United Synagogue of America, the congregational arm of Conservative Judaism. Prefacing his talk, Dr. Siegel noted that the Kiamesha Lake area had not been affected by the recent blackout of electric power in the northeast. He then quoted from Exodus, Chapter 10, verses 21-23: "And there was deep darkness in the whole land of Egypt . . . but for the children of Israel there was light in their dwellings."

According to Dr. Siegel, dialogue requires each participant to respect the integrity and the sincerity of the other. Its purpose, he said, is not to destroy but to "understand, to learn and to love."

Illustrating his thesis, Dr. Siegel described the growth of his Seminary's Institute of Social and Religious Studies where Jew and Christian discuss theological issues "with candor and frankness."

"My conviction that dialogue between Judaism and Christianity is possible is strengthened by the belief that the future of religion is dim indeed if hatred and enmity result from it rather than mutual concern and love," he said.

In discussing the problem of intermarriage, recently cited in a study by the American Jewish Congress, Rabbi Saul I. Teplitz of Congregation Sons of Israel, Woodmere L. I., reports the New York Times, said that while he could not offer an "effective cure" to this "alarming phenomenon," he advised the 1,600 delegates not to seek it primarily among the youth but in the home, the synagogue, and the religious school.

Berlin Drama Warns Auschwitz Is Not Specter Of The Past

The people filed silently from the Volksbühne theater in West Berlin when Peter Weiss's attempt to translate the horrors of Auschwitz for the stage had obviously made a strong impact on the emotions of the audience, says the New York Times. But the drama, "The Investigation," had been aimed not so much at people's emotions as at their brains.

Mr. Weiss wanted to get a message across: The warning that Auschwitz is not a specter of the past but a matter of poignant actuality in the Germany of 1965.

Demonstratively, fourteen theatrical companies in East and West Germany had set the premiere for the same evening at the same hour. In addition, the East Berlin Academy of Arts and the Aldwych Theater in London held public readings. Mr. Weiss, a native of Berlin, attended the premiere at the Volksbühne in West Berlin.

The Jewish author, who now lives in Sweden, has based his play on the recent trial in Frankfurt, where twenty Nazi camp officials were charged with the murder of millions of Jews. Much of the dialogue is taken from the testimony of Auschwitz survivors and the arguments put forward by the accused and their counsel.

Mr. Weiss wrote the play during the trial, much of which he had attended, using his own notes, newspaper reports, and official briefs.

Calling his work an "oratorio in eleven cantatas," he presents a stylized court with the figures of a judge, a prosecutor, and an attorney for the defense. Eighteen of the accused, bearing the names of those actually tried, says the New York Times, are confronted by nine anonymous witnesses, seven

Taught "Quick, Quiet Kill" To U.S., British Commandoes

Bert (Yank) Levy, soldier of fortune and specialist in guerrilla warfare who taught the art of the commando to the British Home Guard and American soldiers in World War II, died in Los Angeles, Cal., of a heart attack. His age was sixty-eight years, as reported in the New York Times. Surviving are his widow, the former Miss Mary Prezenter; a daughter, Mrs. Toby Rose; two brothers, two sisters; and four grandchildren.

Mr. Levy, a 120-pound master of the "quick, quiet kill," was the author of "Guerrilla Warfare," which was used as an instruction manual for British and American armed forces and Allied underground fighters during the war.

In the book, he emphasized that the good guerrilla, in fighting a better-equipped enemy, must always make the most of his three intangible weapons: caution, invisibility, and surprise.

Mr. Levy, a veteran of many wars, taught during World War II in both Britain and the United States the use of incendiaries, bombs, and grenades; how to harass enemy communications; and such tactics as delaying armored vehicles with infantry; hand-to-hand combat, and scouting.

After teaching the British Home Guards in 1941, he said, "Our work there is done. England can't be invaded. The Hun can't land any planes in England with-

Protestant Head Says No Church Has Power To Absolve Jews

The assumption that the power of absolution in connection with the Death of Christ lies with a particular church rather than with God was attacked in St. Paul, Minn., by the Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, Stated Clerk of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., says the New York Times. In remarks prepared for delivery at the Mount Zion Hebrew Congregation, the churchman criticized discussion at the Ecumenical Council, Vatican II, which resulted in the recent declaration on the relation of the Church to non-Christian religions.

The controversial declaration, which was promulgated on October 28 by Pope Paul VI, criticized anti-Semitism and asserted that the Jews cannot be held responsible for the Crucifixion.

In his talk Dr. Blake referred to debate on the question and said, "The most disturbing thing to me about the whole discussion has been the assumption so widely held by Christians that it was in the power of the Church — any Church — to absolve Jews from this ancient charge of guilt.

"Certainly all Christians, if they thought about the matter, would agree that God alone is the Judge of men, and that any usurpation of His prerogative of judgment is

Julius Richardson Hospital Campaigns For $50,000

The Julius Richardson Convalescent Hospital has just launched its annual campaign to raise $50,000 for much needed structural alterations and renovations, Dr. George D. Little, president, announced. The funds are urgently required to bring existing hospital facilities into line with current requirements. The Hospital's cost for these renovations is $100,000, of which some $50,000 has already been received from previous campaigns. The present appeal objective represents the additional money needed to get the work under way.

The Julius Richardson Hospital, 5425 Bessborough Avenue, Montreal, plays an important part in meeting the city's hospital requirements by admitting patients for convalescent care from the active general hospitals. In this way, the active hospitals receive much needed relief, with a consequent reduction in their operating costs.

In announcing the campaign, Dr. Little said that some improvements had been made recently, but the need for additional funds to increase facilities was still most urgent. The Quebec Hospital Insurance Service does not fully cover such costs. He further explained that more than 96 per cent of funds raised in the campaign will go directly into hospital funds, with less than four per cent needed for appeal costs.

The Hospital is devoted to a high standard of nursing and medical care, as well as fully qualified physio-and-occupational therapy service. The Hospital is regularly operating with every available bed occupied. "The need is most urgent and all contributions to meet our requirements will be gratefully received", said Dr. Little.

LES JUIFS DE MONTREAL

Par Conrad Langlois, en La Patrie

ROSH HASHONAH

Selon une croyance ancienne, Dieu inscrivait ce jour-là dans un grand livre le destin de tous et chacun, selon qu'ils étaient bons ou méchants. Les pécheurs pouvaient cependant se convertir, surtout au moment du Yom Kippur. Le port d'un vêtement blanc symbolisait la confiance en la miséricorde divine. Encore aujourd'hui beaucoup de Juifs, au Rosh Hashanah, se saluent par le voeux "Puissiez-vous être inscrit pour une bonne année!"

Les Juifs n'échangent pas comme nous de cadeaux au Jour de l'An (Chez beaucoup de Juifs nord-américains, on donne maintenant des étrennes à l'occasion de la Chanukah ou fête des Chandelles, (en l'honneur des frères Macchabée) qui survient généralement en décembre (du 19 au 26 cette année), c'est-à-dire dans le temps de Noël pour les chrétiens). Même si le Rosh Hashanah est l'occasion de réunions familiales et de repas spéciaux, il ne faut pas oublier que ce début de l'année, pour les Juifs, est surtout une période de repentir et de jeûne.

YOM KIPPUR

Avant le début du Yom Kippur (cette année, le 5 octobre au coucher du soleil), les Juifs prennent un gros repas solennel, avant de passer plus de vingt-quatre heures sans boire ou manger quoi que ce soit. Le jeûne prend fin après la cérémonie de clôture du jour du grand Pardon.

Beaucoup de Juifs en profitent pour se réconcilier avec ceux avec lesquels ils auraient pu avoir des différends, pour payer leurs dettes, pour s'acquitter de leurs obligations et tenir leurs promesses. Ils se demandent pardon mutuellement, font un examen de conscience et prennent de bonnes résolutions.

D'autres observaient certaines coutumes: visiter le cimetière, se faire tourner un poulet autour de la tête, prendre un bain symbolique en signe de purification, etc.

A la synagogue même, en plus de la cérémonie de la confession des péchés (consistant à tous se reconnaître pécheurs), il y en a une autre très solennelle, le Kol Nidrei, qui se termine par une grande profession de foi.

LE SUCCOTH

La fête des Tabernacles (ou Succoth) commençait cette année le 10 octobre au coucher du soleil. Elle commémore les 40 ans dans le désert, après la sortie d'Egypte et avant l'entrée dans la Terre Promise. Même à Montréal, on voit encore des Juifs qui, à cette occasion, se construisent des abris improvisés dans leur cour ou sur leur balcon, en utilisant des branches, des tissus, etc., pour rappeler les tentes qui abritaient les Israélites pendant leur séjour "temporaire" dans le désert du Sinaï.

Les autres grandes fêtes juives sont celles du Simchat Torah (fin des fêtes du début de l'année), la fête du Purim (célébrée en hiver, pour commémorer la façon dont fut éventé le complot d'Haman pour exterminer les Juifs de Perse), la pâque (qui commémore le passage de la mer Rouge), qui se célèbre vers le même temps que la fête de la Résurrection chez les chrétiens, la fête de la Pentecôte (Shavuoth), sept semaines après la pâque, pour rappeler la remise des Dix commandements de Dieu à Moïse.

Précisions enfin qu'il y a quelque 53 synagogues à Montréal et dans la banlieue.

La plupart de ces synagogues sont orthodoxes (plus fidèles aux observances et aux traditions). Cinq sont conservatrices (où un peu moins traditionnalistes) et deux sont réformées (c'est-à-dire beaucoup plus "modernes"). Dans presque toutes les synagogues, les prières se font ordinairement en hébreu, mais les sermons et les annon-

TAKE A WINTER VACATION HOLIDAY

THE MAJOR, UNITED, FUND-RAISING CAMPAIGN VERSUS THE OLD-TIME FUND-RAISING JUNGLE

By Edward Barkoff, 653 Roslyn Avenue, Montreal

The completion of a separate campaign for Israel and overseas needs by one Canadian community this spring, and the prospect that several other communities may adopt this "new" separatist formula is being hailed somewhat erroneously and prematurely as the answer to the fund-raising ills of communities which have been lagging behind.

There is a grave danger that the hard facts of the fundamentals of fund-raising are being lost sight of in the hasty evaluation of the results of one partial experience. One of these vital facts is that multiple campaigns were discarded many years ago as a divisive, inadequate, outworn technique.

The fund-raising jungle that then existed was replaced by united fund-raising efforts and this formula has succeeded in attaining maximum participation, maximum coverage, and maximum results. Almost every community across the continent has accepted the credo that total community needs can best be met by total community effort, and the results have unqualifiedly proved this to be so.

It is somewhat difficult to envision, in this day and age, that communities which are contemplating this backward step can really be convinced that this can create an effective improvement in their fund-raising results.

How can the discarding of tried and proven techniques be justified after they have been instrumental in raising such vast sums of money and attaining such undreamed of heights in both Canada and the United States for local and overseas needs?

Although our present fund-raising situation is not exactly utopian, have we such short memories that we cannot recall the difficulties which communities encountered when campaigns were a constant, year-round occurence? Just to mention a few of the problems that used to arise:

How much more costly it was to conduct a number of campaigns as compared to the present major, united effort.

How much more acute were the problems of obtaining top leadership, adequate manpower and proper coverage for numerous campaigns instead of for one.

How the campaign that came first, or was able to corral the more dynamic leadership, would obtain better results at the expense of the later campaigns, or those that were not as well organized, though they may have been equally meritorious.

How communal schisms and divisiveness were often engendered by well-meaning zealots who gave their maximum effort and means to one pet cause and refused to recognize other needs.

However, despite the fact that the above-outlined pitfalls are generally remembered and admitted, the proponents of the return to separate campaigns argue that this is the only way they feel they can shake their communities out of a situation where the giving has become frozen at a level that is both not commensurate with the capacity of the givers, and inadequate to meet their obligations for local and overseas requirements.

The obvious answer to this type of reasoning is that no community can expect to surmount weakness of campaign results by dividing and weakening its structure but rather by further uniting and strengthening it.

As regards Vancouver, which has been cited as an instance of successful separate campaigning, this still remains to be proven. True, the overseas portion of their campaign, conducted this spring, did show improved results, but the real evaluation will be possible only after its second campaign, which takes place this fall, and which will be for local needs alone, will be completed.

Even this will not necessarily present the entire picture, as the true test will be in the results obtained in the following year, when it will be possible to ascertain how the community will react to the strain of two campaigns in one year, and it will also be known, only then, whether it will be possible to retain the gains made in the overseas drive.

Several other communities have been mentioned as thinking of following in Vancouver's footsteps. It is, therefore, essential that before the "Crack In Joint Community Fund-raising", to quote a recent headline in a Anglo-Jewish periodical, develops into a split of the traditional unity of Canadian Jewry, our responsible national bodies must alert communities to these danger signals, survey the present trend, and provide the strong leadership and positive direction that is now called for.

The Canadian Jewish Congress, the Zionist Organization of Canada, and the Joint National Fund-raising Committee, after collective deliberation, should issue a "white paper" on fund-raising that will serve as a guide to all communities and bring a stop to the erosion of the precious unity for which Canadian Jewry is noted, and envied, and wherein lies its strength and potential for greater achievements.

BERLIN DRAMA

of them symbolic survivors of the camp. In the real trial, which ended August 19, seventeen defendants were sentenced to terms ranging from 39 months to life. Three were acquitted.

Two other witnesses in the drama represent anonymous German accomplices — industrialists, railway officials, a judge.

"You had a high position in the German railway system and you have a high position now," the prosecutor addressed one witness. "You must have noticed these mass shipments of human beings locked up in freight trains." But the witness testified he knew nothing.

The oratorio became the object of a literary controversy even before its premiere. Critics and columnists of West German newspapers questioned whether the theater should present what one of them called "ersatz repentance."

But Erwin Piscator, the head of the Volksbühne, violently rejected the argument, calling the stage an "authentic place of moral demonstrations, of confession, of crime and atonement." Mr. Piscator, veteran fighter for the theater of social commitment, took the lead in accepting the play for the 75th anniversary of the Volksbühne.

Newspaper reviews after the premiere gave qualified praise to the play and supported Mr. Piscator's moral stand, says the New York Times. "In contrast to all predictions the play has proved its effectiveness on the stage," the West German newspaper, Die Welt, said.

PROTESTANT HEAD SAYS

as great a sin as any it would presume to absolve," he said.

Dr. Blake, who is co-author with James A. Pike, Episcopal Bishop of California, of a proposal for the merger of several major Protestant denominations, said that the "sorry history of religious prejudice" is perhaps the chief reason that many modern men reject God and any religious understanding of life."

Both Christians and Jews, he said, have used their faith in God as an excuse for religious prejudice and persecution.

"While it is true that in quantity the persecution of Jews by Christians is overwhelming," he said "it needs to be remembered that in quality this persecution is not different from that visited upon the first Christians by Jewish religious leaders."

Dr. Blake spoke of the need for Jews and Christians to work together in the struggle against secularism.

"It is my conviction," he said, "that Judaism and Christianity have a common mission to the modern world to reveal by their words and actions their common conviction that God is and that men may come to know Him and obey Him."

Such a mission cannot be undertaken, however, "unless we are willing to understand better than we have the central difference in our faith." The dilution of either Judaism or Christianity into "a kind of syncretistic tolerance," he said, reports the New York Times, would result in "the collapse of faith in God and the end of high religion in favor of secularism."

What is the A. B. C. or Audit Bureau of Circulations, and what is its importance?

A. The A. B. C. is a voluntary association of major publishers, advertisers, national and local; and advertising agencies, working together to police circulation claims, and to translate them into facts.

Q. Why are circulation facts so important?

A. Circulation figures are the only honest basis on which print advertising is sold and purchased. Publishers base their prices for advertising on the amount of their circulation, and its quality. An advertiser buys circulation. A. B. C. circulation facts tell him the exact amount at any time.

Q. How does an advertiser know that this is really so?

A. A. B. C. publishers keep exact records of all circulation receipts for subscriptions and single copy sales. These can tell him, too, whether the circulation is sold without a premium, or with one, to induce payment; or whether the circulation is composed of membership in an organization; or whether it is sold on its merit alone. Was the subscription sold on a special rate? Was it paid by mail directly to the publisher, or to an agent? These are just some of the categories of subscription payments which are recorded.

Q. Why are some of these answers so important?

A. Sometimes these answers can tell an advertiser whether the subscriber needs to be coaxed into continuing, or starting. Are subscribers voluntarily buying the publication? Do they need a cut-rate or an added attraction to keep on?

Q. How are the figures checked?

A. The publisher checks his figures, and reports them twice a year to the head office of the A. B. C. These are audited once a year by travelling A. B. C. auditors, who check the names, the receipts, the printing invoices, the bank deposits, the paper used, the ink used, the postage receipts — all of these show the number of copies printed or mailed; and paid for. If an A. B. C. field auditor goes to work for a publication whose books he has audited within a year or so, there is an automatic re-audit by another auditor. An auditor does not audit the figures of any publication for more than two consecutive years.

Q. Does the A. B. C. allow past-due subscriptions?

A. The A. B. C. rules state that all subscriptions up for renewal must be paid within three months of the expiry date. The publisher must keep track of each one. These are considered paid, but not completely so, until paid in full, for the term to come.

Q. Are new subscriptions considered as paid?

A. Not until payment is received for the term in advance.

Q. What does this cost the publisher?

A. The publisher considers the membership as his investment to protect the investment of each advertiser. The publisher pays quarterly dues; the cost of the auditing done in his office, by the hour; and the cost of checking done further, at the A. B. C. head office. If further checking is needed, the publisher pays that cost, too. An auditor spends several days in the Canadian Jewish Review office each year.

Q. Are these the only costs?

A. The greatest cost to the publisher is to see that the records are kept in order and up to date. The Canadian Jewish Review addressograph plates are posted to show the date and method and amount of payment; and the date of the subscription, and the length of its term. A publication must carry on the address label all information that the auditor would need to guide him in checking. A publication which sells subscriptions on short-term, or with a premium, or in combination with other publications, for instance, will carry all that information and more, on the address label, coded in some way.

Q. What do A. B. C. reports and statements say about the Canadian Jewish Review?

A. They tell at a quick glance the provincial breakdown; the amount sold in a period; that the Canadian Jewish Review never sells a subscription on a premium; never with a cut rate; never jointly with another publication; never as part of membership in an organization.

The Canadian Jewish Review is sold on its own merits, and always has been.
It has no affiliation with any organization.

A. B. C. reports and statements supply facts to advertisers.
These facts need to be known for advertising money to be spent wisely and honestly.

A. B. C. publications can never guarantee results. They do guarantee readership.

The Canadian Jewish Review is in its 22nd year of supplying facts to advertisers, investing to protect investments.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only publication reaching the general Jewish community in Canada, which can provide audited, paid, A. B. C. circulation facts and figures for the protection of each advertiser.

Archbishop Says Urgently: Britons Must Create Neighbourly Conditions For Immigrants

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Ramsey, said: "Immigrants have to learn a lot about this country and its funny ways and we natives need to know a great deal more about immigrants — what sort of people they are and how to get on with them and help them. If we know about one another — what are the sort of things which are likely to annoy — we can tackle the task of becoming less annoyed and more neighbourly."

A few days before the new National Committee for Commonwealth Immigrants held its first meeting, says the London Times, the Archbishop, whose appointment as chairman was announced from the Prime Minister's office, called a press conference to explain how the committee will carry out its work of promoting and co-ordinating on a national basis efforts towards integration of Commonwealth immigrants.

There now existed a large population of immigrants in Britain and whatever the rate of increase might be it was urgently necessary "to create the conditions under which immigrants will live happily among us and we shall live happily with them as neighbours."

The tackling of the practical problems was one of the ways in which racial prejudice might be lessened, he said.

Besides the promotion of particular action by persons with the necessary skills, he said, there was also the task of bringing about a greater understanding of the problems by the community generally.

"The challenge is both to the intelligence and to the conscience of all of us citizens", the Archbishop added. He appealed to citizens generally to see the bigness of the challenge and help the work of the committee. "It would be to the shame of our country to leave this immense problem to the mercy of inaction and racial prejudice", he said.

The Archbishop politely fended off questions aimed at discovering his attitude to aspects of the Government's White Paper, particularly stricter controls. The new committee was charged with the problem of integration irrespective of current policy concerning controls, he said. But he intimated that if the committee found that the work of integration was being hindered by the policy, they would tell the Government so. "I regard us as having a free hand in giving any advice we like to the Government", he said.

He was asked whether nationalist organizations, some of them militant, which had been set up, were going to help or hinder the committee. "I am sure they could hinder a lot if they tried", the Archbishop replied. "But one of the aims of our committee will be to cut the ground away from racialist propaganda by removing the bad conditions which racialist propaganda is able to exploit."

If the housing problem was handled in a quite haphazard way where there was a large influx of immigrants there could be unsatisfactory conditions and people could start blaming one another and stirring up prejudice.

Would the committee then press the Government for special housing help in immigrant areas? "I think it is our business to press the Government for every need we see in these fields where action from the Government could really help", he said, reports the London Times. The Archbishop, asked if there was need for wider dispersal of immigrants, said one of their chief tasks was to help immigrants find their way to localities which were best able to receive them regarding housing, employment, and education.

Family circumstances must be considered, but, he added, it was possible to move a husband and his family if a place could be found where they would be happier.

Mr. Foley, Parliamentary Under-Secretary in the Department of Economics Affairs with special responsibility for immigration, said that on his recent travels he had found that immigrants, wherever they came from, wanted to be treated as human persons with exactly the same rights and responsibilities as anyone else. It required education to bring about a change in atmosphere. "The plain, hard fact is that these people are here and should be treated as equals — and they are not", he said.

The Archbishop said the committee would watch what was happening in different localities and would give information and guidance to places where not enough was being done. They would be in touch with the efforts of local authorities and liaison committees set up in areas where immigrants had settled in considerable numbers.

They would work partly through a number of panels in which some members of the committee would be able to collaborate with other individuals and organizations, including immigrants themselves, says the London Times. The committee will issue reports from time to time.

out-facing hundreds of men ready to get him.

"In fact, Great Britain can release three million men from England for an invasion of the Continent, and do it with full safety."

In 1942 Mr. Levy became the instructor at the first United States training school for guerrilla fighting, at Concord, Mass. He had lectured widely on his specialty and was credited with designing a knife used in combat by Carlsen's raiders.

He was born in Hamilton, Ont., and he enlisted in the British Army at the start of World War I. He learned about war on the front lines. Fighting in Palestine, he met the scouts of Lawrence of Arabia, who taught him guerrilla tactics, says the New York Times. Near the end of the war he was poisoned in a gas attack and sent home.

He fought as a paid soldier in the Nicaraguan revolt of 1926, and when the Spanish civil war started in 1936, he joined the Loyalist International Brigade. It was his practice of guerrilla warfare in Spain that brought him to the attention of the British Government.

In February, 1937, he was captured near Madrid. His wife, then in Windsor, Ont., appealed to Premier W. L. Mackenzie King to get him home. She insisted that he had been hired by the Loyalists to drive a truck behind the front lines, but that they later forced him to fight. He was released from a Spanish prison camp in May of 1937.

Mr. Levy's peacetime profession was that of printer. He had also driven a taxi in Cleveland, Ohio. At his death he was an American citizen.

ces se font soit en yiddish ou en anglais, sauf dans quatre ou cinq, maintenant, où on utilise le français.

Deux grands rites sont en usage dans les synagogues. A Montréal, le rite le plus répandu est celui des Ashkénazis, c'est-à-dire des Juifs originaires du Nord ou des pays germaniques, et celui des Séphardes ou Juifs originaires de pays du Sud, comme par exemple l'Espagne ou le Portugal. A Montréal, ce sont surtout les Juifs nord-africains qui sont de langue française et de rite séphardique.
